

[Anchor:]

Welcome back to Current Tonight. Rawley V. here, and Current.com user

[INSERT VIDEO VO

NAME: daveCDC]

"GossipAndGab" posted this next story about the latest in the Letterman extortion scandal.

[INSERT WIPE

NAME: letterman]

And the latest is that at least one college might be a bit nervous about sending its students to work as interns on the Late Show. According to a recent TMZ story, an unnamed faculty member at

[INSERT WIPE

NAME: quinnipiac]

Quinnipiac (quin-IPP-ee-ack) University in Connecticut says it will closely monitor its interns on the show to make sure no funny business is going on.

[Anchor:]

But a university spokesman now says those comments were unauthorized, and it has no official position on the Letterman situation. Now, TMZ being TMZ, they also dug up what they say is a handout given to Late Show interns in 2002.

[INSERT VIDEO VO

NAME: handout]

And as you can see here, one piece of advice it gives is "if you get confused, ask questions. No one here bites." No word on whether that line has since been revised.

---